Religious groups should deliver public services "on an equal opportunities basis"

Posted: Tue, 9th Jan 2018

A minister has told the NSS public services must be delivered "on an equal opportunities basis", including by religious groups.

The Minister for Civil Society has told the National Secular Society that public services must be delivered "on an equal opportunities basis", including by religious groups.

In December last year the NSS challenged Tracey Crouch MP after she told Christian charity and church leaders they should "challenge anyone in government who makes you feel you need to suppress your faith". Ms Crouch told the Raising Funds for Christian Charities and Churches event it was not the Government's intention to "discourage you from speaking openly about the faith that motivates you".

The NSS wrote to the minister to express concern that her words could be interpreted as condoning, or even encouraging, proselytising by faith groups contracted to provide public services.

In a letter to NSS chief executive Stephen Evans, Ms Crouch agreed that "everyone should be able to receive public services on an equal opportunities basis".

"The award of government contracts is subject to existing legislation and guidelines including the Equalities Act and the Government Commercial Function's code of conduct," she wrote.

Following Ms Crouch's reply, Mr Evans said: "While we welcome the minister's desire for public services to be delivered on an equal opportunities basis, it is disappointing that she failed to make explicitly clear that public services shouldn't be used as a platform for proselytising.

"Where religious organisations deliver public services they must do so without proselytising as this can put service users and vulnerable people in particular at risk of exploitation. Unambiguous equality, non-discrimination and non-proselytising clauses in contracts would give the public more confidence in religious organisations delivering services and at the same time ensure those delivering services could be clear about appropriate boundaries."

"Faith groups should not be excluded from competing for public contracts and grants on an equal basis, but it is imperative that such groups deliver their services in an entirely secular manner to ensure equality, fairness and human rights are kept at the forefront of the services we all pay for."

Image: Tracey Crouch delivers her speech to the event 'Raising Funds for Christian Charities and Churches'.

- Share on What's App
- Share on Facebook
- Share on Twitter
- Share on Email
- Subscribe to RSS Feed

Tags: Charity, Public services

Related Campaigns

•

Keep public services secular

Public services intended for the whole community should be provided in a secular context.

Read More

•

Reform charity laws

All charities, religious or not, should be held to the same standards.

Read More

Related Articles

Time to bring policies on religion in line with public opinion

As yet another study confirms Brits aren't keen on religion, Megan Manson says politicians should reflect public opinion by reeling in religious privilege. Read More »

Government terminates funding of "hate speech" Christian group

The government has ended its funding agreement with a charity whose chair called Islam "demonic" after the National... Read More »

Council reviews funding of Christian group accused of "hate speech"

A council is conducting an "urgent review" of its relationship with a Christian charity that the government criticised... Read More »

Government funds charity bringing "biblical truth" to sex workers

The National Secular Society has criticised the government for funding a faith group which aims to bring "biblical... Read More »

NSS urges Scotland to ensure food banks are inclusive

The National Secular Society has advised the Scottish government to address discrimination in religious charities... Read More »