

Establishment and the gay bishop

Posted: Wed, 18th Jan 2012 by Terry Sanderson

Geoffrey John, the clergyman at the heart of the gay bishops row, is threatening to take the Church of England to court if it continually refuses to make him a bishop.

It isn't clear what law he would sue under. Certainly not the Equality Act, which specifically exempts the appointment of clergy from protection, defining it as a "genuine occupational requirement". In effect, the law permits churches to have complete discretion over who they appoint to preach their message. It is a narrow exemption, but one that would quite clearly rule out Geoffrey John. If he had been a choirmaster or an organist or an administrator, he would have had grounds for challenge. But it is difficult to see how he would have a case under equality law. Perhaps he has some other avenue of challenge in mind, or perhaps he just wants to create a kerfuffle to humiliate and inconvenience those who have humiliated him.

The exemption to the Equality Act is in line with the NSS's Secular Charter, which states: "The state does not intervene in the setting of religious doctrine or the running of religious organisations."

This is secularism. The state keeps out of the Church's business (so long as it remains within the law) and the Church stays out of the state's business.

Except, of course, England has an archaic entanglement between the Anglican Church and state that complicates this whole issue. So, although the established Church wants the state to stay out of its business, it does not return the compliment. Indeed, it has political representatives sitting in our parliament as of right. The Queen, as head of state (and not just of England), automatically also becomes the Church's Supreme Governor.

So, there is no constitutional secularism in Britain and the silliness of the establishment is pointed out by this challenge by the Rev John, who wants to use a secular court to sort out Church business.

It seems the Church wants it both ways. It wants to be exempt from the law on religious grounds, but it also wants to pretend that it is the "nation's church" serving everyone without fear or favour. Unfortunately, under the CofE's excluding and exclusive definition, gay people and women appear to be less than equal citizens of that nation.

See also:

Why is this cleric suing the Church when he knows he won't win?

Were gay people included in Martin Luther King's "dream" of a perfect world?

Terry Sanderson

Terry Sanderson was the former president of the National Secular Society. The views expressed in our blogs are those of the author and may not necessarily represent the views of the NSS.

- Share on What's App
- Share on Facebook
- Share on Twitter
- Share on Email
- Subscribe to RSS Feed

Tags: Disestablishment

Related Campaigns

-

Disestablish the Church of England

A state religion has no place in a 21st century democracy.

Read More

Related Articles

NSS announces major conference on protecting liberal values

Kenan Malik, Joan Smith and more speaking at NSS Secularism 2024 conference in London. Read More »

New extremism definition may put free speech at risk, NSS warns

Proposed definition could 'label secularists as extremists'. Read More »

A state Church is no bulwark against extremism – but secularism is

With its commitment to the separation of religion and state and safeguarding the rights of all individuals, secularism can provide an effective defence against the spread of extremism, says Stephen Evans. Read More »

Report: CofE safeguarding “below standards” of secular institutions

Most victims and survivors unsatisfied with safeguarding approaches, while safeguarding 'weaponised' to remove those "seen as a nuisance", report finds. Read More »

Resist calls for £50m a year for churches, NSS urges minister

Churches trust also calls for churches to host NHS services. Read More »