

Oxford alumnus protests against Christian Concern

Posted: Fri, 13th Apr 2012

An Oxford graduate has returned his degree in protest at his college agreeing to host a conference run by a Christian group which does not favour gay rights. Michael Amherst, who read English at Exeter College, acted in protest against a conference organised by the Wilberforce Academy—which is run in association with Christian Concern, reports Pink News.

Christian Concern founder Andrea Minichiello Williams said:

"Homosexuals are displaying an extraordinary intolerance for us and freedom of thought. We are motivated by love and compassion for all people. Everyone seems to forget Oxford University was founded by Christians."
