Christian charity faces investigation over promotion of misogyny

Posted: Wed, 7th Jul 2021

England and Wales's charity regulator will investigate a newly-registered Christian charity which has promoted misogynistic messages, including by blaming women for rape, after the National Secular Society raised concerns.

The Charity Commission has told the NSS it will open a case into Holiness Revival Movement Worldwide Europe, also known as Horemow Europe, which registered at the end of May.

Horemow Europe's website has also featured lengthy rants against women who wear trousers.

Charities are required to serve a public benefit and not to promote extremist views. The NSS wrote to the commission last month and said material on Horemow Europe's website was incompatible with these requirements.

Misogynistic messages

A passage in one leaflet on Horemow Europe's website explicitly blamed women's fashion choices for contributing to rape, saying:

"What does it mean to look sexy anyway? It is simply to appeal for or suggest sex by the way you dress and apply make-up. No wonder there is increase in rape today and people are not addressing the real problem. You who dress like this is a strong contributor to the problem."

Blogs on the website also feature claims that trousers are "the uniform of a harlot" and wearing trousers helps women "to market her commodity to get the opposite sex aroused as they view the shape of her private part".

The commission has now said it will "open a case due to the issues raised" and "engage with the charity". Some of the material the NSS highlighted has now been removed from the website.

Comment

NSS head of policy and research Megan Manson welcomed the commission's investigation but said the charity should not have been registered in the first place.

"The Charity Commission should now move to ensure Horemow Europe doesn't enjoy the privileges of charitable status while pushing messages which fuel rape culture.

"Unfortunately we've come across a number of religious organisations enjoying charitable status - including the accompanying tax breaks and recognition that they are serving a public benefit - while promoting misogyny.

"This highlights the need to remove 'the advancement of religion' as a charitable purpose in its own right, so both religious and secular charities are required to serve a genuine public benefit."

Third Sector, which published a story on the commission's decision to investigate this week, said the charity hadn't responded to a request for comment before publication.

Other religious charities promoting misogyny

- Several other religious charities perpetuate deeply sexist stereotypes including by encouraging women to stay at home and do what their husbands tell them.
- Several Islamic charities have also hosted or signposted material that endorsed or condoned violence against women. These have only been taken down after the NSS raised concerns with the commission.
- A recent blog by Megan Manson, Charity law shouldn't enable misogyny, outlined more details of the NSS's concerns around Horemow Europe and these charities.

NSS campaigning on charity law

- The NSS campaigns for the removal of 'the advancement of religion' as a charitable purpose, to ensure religious organisations don't exploit charity law to promote harmful activities.
- An NSS report, For the Public Benefit?, outlined the case for this reform of charity law in 2019.

Photo by Heitor Verdi from Pexels (cropped to fit).

Discuss on Facebook

Write to your MP: reform charity law

Tell your MP it's time for 'the advancement of religion' to be removed as a charitable purpose. Enter your postcode below to find your MP and send a letter to them.

Enter Postcode:

Find my MP

- Share on What's App
- Share on Facebook
- Share on Twitter
- Share on Email
- Subscribe to RSS Feed

Tags: Charity, Women

Related Campaigns

Reform charity laws

All charities, religious or not, should be held to the same standards.

Read More

•

Women's rights

End religious subordination of women and girls.

Read More

Related Articles

Experts speak out against religious abuse

Public authorities failing to tackle abuse in religious settings, panellists say at NSS event. Read More »

NSS urges First Minister to review misogyny enabling charity law

NSS says the charitable purpose 'the advancement of religion' is "significantly impeding" efforts to combat misogyny Read More »

Regulator OKs misogyny, homophobia at Scottish religious charities

The National Secular Society is calling for reforms to charity law in Scotland after the charity regulator said it... Read More »

NSS backs plans to pardon convicted Scottish 'witches'

The National Secular Society has backed plans to formally pardon those convicted of witchcraft in Scotland but said... Read More »

Don't let religion enable violence against women in NI, NSS says

The National Secular Society has warned the Northern Ireland Executive that conservative religious teachings may play... Read More »