

Leave Citizen Khan alone! Po-faced, humourless Muslim protestors are their own worst enemy

Posted: Wed, 29th Aug 2012 by Terry Sanderson

The new BBC sitcom Citizen Khan has, apparently, created something of a stir among Muslims. The BBC is reporting having received more than 200 complaints about its portrayal of the "Muslim Community", claiming it is disrespectful of Islam and full of stereotypes. Now Ofcom, the media regulator, has announced that it is launching an investigation into complaints the show is "racist".

The first episode showed a bit of promise (although at times it seemed it would have been more effective in a cartoon format) and as with all sitcoms, it will take a little time to develop and for the characters to become established.

It seems one of the elements that has irritated some Muslims is the portrayal of one of the daughters of the family who wears a hijab to please her dad (a pompous self-styled "community leader"). In secret, though, she casts it off at the first opportunity to text and carouse with her mates in thick make-up and tight pants.

It's a rather broad style of humour, but a very important step in widening understanding and acceptance of Pakistanis in our society. To see that they are able to laugh at themselves as well as be po-faced and boringly oversensitive is vitally important. To explore the uneasy clash of cultures through humour is valuable for everyone.

If this comedy is successful and the characters enter the affections of the British public, then it could do a huge service to community relations.

There was certainly no anti-Islamic sentiment, just an affectionate pop at the difficulty of maintaining a life that is completely dominated by religious demands while living in a society that is dominated by secular temptations.

The BBC's other sitcom in this genre – Rev – is more sophisticated but covers much of the same ground. Modern Britain is not particularly enamoured of religion, be it Christian or Islamic, and the tribulations and alienation of those who still cling to their beliefs are fertile ground for comedy.

Those Muslims who are protesting at the moment should calm down. Citizen Khan has the potential to do a big favour for Muslims in Britain if it is allowed to develop without every episode bringing a flood of complaints from those who are so insecure in their beliefs that they think they will crumble to dust if someone makes even a small joke about them.

You can see the first episode of Citizen Khan on the BBC's iPlayer

Terry Sanderson

Terry Sanderson was the former president of the National Secular Society. The views expressed in our blogs are those of the author and may not necessarily represent the views of the NSS.

- Share on What's App
- Share on Facebook
- Share on Twitter
- Share on Email
- Subscribe to RSS Feed

Tags: Free speech, Thought for the Day

Related Campaigns

-

Protect freedom of expression

We promote free speech as a positive value.

Read More

-

Reform 'Thought for the Day'

Thought for the Day should include nonreligious contributions – or be scrapped.

Read More

Related Articles

We must empower secular schools to assert their ethos

When Islamists tried to bully Michaela Community School, the school refused to back down. Other schools have not been so successful in challenging religious intimidation. Megan Manson explores what made Michaela different. Read More »

BBC dilutes protections for religious ideas after NSS lobbying

The BBC has watered down some protections for religious ideas but retained a clause placing a premium on depictions... Read More »

NSS: religious offence-taking must not curtail free speech at BBC

The National Secular Society has urged the BBC to treat free expression "as a positive value" as it raised concerns... Read More »

New BBC consultation 'an opportunity to challenge Thought For The Day'

The BBC has launched a new consultation asking listeners what they like and dislike about its speech radio output.... Read More »

Has the BBC Trust killed vigorous debate about religion on our national broadcaster?

The BBC Trust – which advertises itself as the "final arbiter in complaints to the BBC" — has upheld a... Read More »