

The Minister for Faith went on a tour of Anglican cathedrals and all we got was a lousy report

Posted: Thu, 4th Jan 2018 by Stephen Evans

Stephen Evans questions the point of a Minister for Faith and says his recent tour of all 42 of England's Anglican cathedrals was a waste of ministerial time and taxpayers' money.

I've often wondered what the point of a Minister for Faith is. What do they actually do? Well, now we know.

In a report published over the Christmas period, the current incumbent of this non-job, Lord Bourne of Aberystwyth, explained that when he became Minister for Faith he decided to set out on a tour of all 42 Anglican cathedrals "to celebrate their great work and better understand their role in today's society".

Lord Bourne set off on his road trip in October 2016 and finished it almost a year later in September 2017. The subsequent report, which reads like a school's pupil's 'what I did on my school holidays' homework assignment, tells us nothing that we didn't already know.

You don't need to embark on a tour of all 42 Anglican cathedrals to recognise that in addition to being centres of worship, prayer and spirituality, cathedrals are often majestic buildings, thriving tourist attractions and play an important role in the civil, economic and communal life of the cities and regions in which they're situated. We already know that. The whole endeavour strikes me as a colossal waste of ministerial time and taxpayers money, intended to make people of faith feel good about themselves.

Or maybe the tour was seen as a way of justifying the government's recent £40 million handout to English cathedrals to assist with repairs – and perhaps as a pretext for further funding. Few would question the need to preserve these historic and architecturally significant buildings. But given that the raison d'être of churches and cathedrals is faith and worship, shouldn't this responsibility sit primarily with the incredibly wealthy Church of England, rather than the hard pressed taxpayer?

The Minister for Faith makes much of the worthy work cathedrals do in their communities, but businesses, social enterprises and not-for-profits up and down the country tirelessly carry out social action without the reward of a ministerial visit. For example, most of the UK's football clubs, from the Premier League giants down to the lowliest of non-league minnows, carry out excellent work in their communities to promote social inclusion and cohesion, educating children and often transforming the lives of young people, reducing crime and anti-social behaviour as a result. Will a communities minister be setting off on a tour of football clubs to "celebrate their great work"? I doubt it.

The position of a Minister for Faith privileges faith. Within Government, I'm sure the tour was seen as a way of massaging the ego of Anglican voters who are feeling 'marginalised' by the nation's indifference to Christianity. Note the Minister only visited Anglican cathedrals and in his report describes Britain as a "Christian country". Given that Lord Bourne's ministerial brief also includes community cohesion, why did he not use the opportunity to also visit the country's mosques and temples to see what they're doing to improve community cohesion? Even if he did, there's no guarantee he would make an honest and objective assessment. The role of the Minister of Faith has always been to champion faith rather than treat it with any sense of neutrality.

Lord Bourne concludes the foreword to his report by suggesting that we all set off on a nationwide cathedral tour of our own. Many people around the UK would probably enjoy that, but some of us have jobs to do and, unlike the minister for faith, can't rely on the government to subsidise our hobbies.

Stephen Evans

Stephen is the CEO of the National Secular Society. You can follow him on Twitter @stephenmevans1. The views expressed in our blogs are those of the author and may not represent the views of the NSS.

While you're here

Our news and opinion content is an important part of our campaigns work. Many articles involve a lot of research by our campaigns team. If you value this output, please consider supporting us today.

- Support us from just £1 a month

- Share on What's App
- Share on Facebook
- Share on Twitter
- Share on Email
- Subscribe to RSS Feed

Tags: Disestablishment

Related Campaigns

-

Disestablish the Church of England

A state religion has no place in a 21st century democracy.

Read More

Related Articles

NSS announces major conference on protecting liberal values

Kenan Malik, Joan Smith and more speaking at NSS Secularism 2024 conference in London. Read More »

New extremism definition may put free speech at risk, NSS warns

Proposed definition could 'label secularists as extremists'. Read More »

A state Church is no bulwark against extremism – but secularism is

With its commitment to the separation of religion and state and safeguarding the rights of all individuals, secularism can provide an effective defence against the spread of extremism, says Stephen Evans. Read More »

Report: CofE safeguarding “below standards” of secular institutions

Most victims and survivors unsatisfied with safeguarding approaches, while safeguarding 'weaponised' to remove those "seen as a nuisance", report finds. Read More »

Resist calls for £50m a year for churches, NSS urges minister

Churches trust also calls for churches to host NHS services. Read More »