

Tags: Caste

Ep 36: Faith-shaped holes in the Equality Act

Posted: Thu, 15th Oct 2020

This month marks the tenth anniversary of the Equality Act 2010 coming into effect, a landmark piece of legislation that reformed and improved the law on equality in the UK.

In this episode of the podcast, Emma Park speaks to Liberal Democrat peer Lynne Featherstone. Baroness Featherstone was an MP when the Equality Bill went through parliament, and, as a junior Home Office minister with responsibility for equality, helped to implement the act.

She also wrote the foreword to the NSS's recent report on how religious privilege continues to undermine equality law.

The speakers discuss the significance of the Equality Act when it was made, why so many religious exemptions were carved out of it, and why the act is important to everyone in the UK. They also discuss the findings of the NSS's report.

Emma is then joined by Megan Manson, the NSS's head of policy and research, to consider the report and its implications in further detail.

Follow Emma on Twitter: @DrEmmaPark

Watch this episode on YouTube | Direct MP3 Link | Transcripts

See also: Faith-shaped holes: How religious privilege is undermining equality law

Support the podcast, share with a friend and leave a positive review everywhere you can.

Subscribe to NSS Podcasts: Apple Podcasts | Android | Google Podcasts | Stitcher | Spotify | RSS | YouTube | Blubrry | TuneIn.

If you value the podcast please share it with a friend and leave us a positive review wherever you get it. You can also support future podcasts and our campaigns by joining the NSS or making a donation.