

Thought for the Day explicitly excludes non-religious contributors.

The BBC should move away from biased religious programming. That should begin with a rethink of Thought for the Day.

The BBC has a long history of pro-religion bias in its output, which is typified by Thought for the Day.

Thought for the Day is a daily slot on BBC Radio 4's flagship news programme, Today. For nearly three minutes, religious leaders offer "reflections from a faith perspective on issues and people in the news". Nonreligious people and leaders of less popular religions, no matter how well-respected their views, are not allowed to contribute.

Despite being within such a prominent discussion slot, Thought for the Day is outside the programme's editorial control. This means there is no right to reply when the slot is used for political or religious proselytising.

- Fewer than one in five British people think BBC Radio 4's Thought for the Day should exclusively feature religious content.
- Religious radio programmes are the least popular and least well received according to the BBC's own research.

Public apathy towards Thought for the Day is even shared by Today's former presenter, John Humphrys, who described the slot as "inappropriate" and "deeply, deeply boring" in 2017. His colleague Justin Webb has also criticised it.

Reforming Thought for the Day to include speakers of any religion or belief would improve overall quality, make it relevant to Today's audience and remove the unjustifiable discrimination. Contributors should be picked without reference to their religious or non-religious identity.

There is a place for high quality, critical religion and belief programming on the BBC – but not one-sided promotion of religion.

Take action!

1. Share your story

Tell us why you support this campaign, and how you are personally affected by the issue. You can also let us know if you would like assistance with a particular issue.

- Share your story

2. Join the National Secular Society

Become a member of the National Secular Society today! Together, we can separate religion and state for greater freedom and fairness.

- Join us!

Latest updates

Nicky Campbell to deliver NSS Bradlaugh Lecture

Posted: Wed, 2 Aug 2023 14:01

'The Big Questions' host to share insights into career and media's treatment of religion at NSS event

Scrap 'discriminatory' Thought for the Day, says former presenter

Posted: Wed, 2 Oct 2019 16:10

The National Secular Society has urged the BBC to reform its Thought for the Day slot on Radio 4 after the former presenter John Humphrys described it as "discriminatory".

Appearing on ITV's Good Morning Britain on Wednesday, Humphrys called Thought for the Day "rather pointless" and agreed with a suggestion that it was "anachronistic".

Humphrys said he had "no problem with the Thought for the Day" but criticised the fact the slot is "not sold to us as religious Thought for the Day".

He also criticised the fact that those with religious views can present it while those without them cannot.

Asked whether he thought the slot was "anachronistic", he replied "totally". And asked whether it "should go", he nodded and said: "I would go further. I would say it's discriminatory."

The NSS has long campaigned for reform of Thought for the Day, a three-minute slot for reflection within Radio 4's Today programme, which Humphrys presented until his retirement last month.

The slot is only open to those speaking from a religious perspective. The NSS argues that it should be scrapped or secularised, so non-religious people can take part on equal terms to the religious.

In response to Humphrys's comments NSS chief executive Stephen Evans has written to Sarah Sands, the editor of Today, and Mohit Bakaya, the controller of Radio 4.

Mr Evans said Thought for the Day should be turned into "an ethical current affairs reflection slot" if the BBC was committed to keeping it.

He described the BBC's current approach as "indefensible and unsustainable" and said the corporation should review whether the programme is compatible with its duties on impartiality.

"As things stand the slot reinforces prejudice and discrimination against the non-religious and is regarded as irrelevant by a majority of the British public.

"Widening the scope of the slot would not only make the programme more relevant but increase the overall quality of the broadcast. It would allow reflection on current affairs and ethical issues – including those of a religious perspective – without having to shoehorn in a religious framework."

He also highlighted NSS research from May 2018 which found that fewer than one in five British people think the slot should always feature religious content.

Explaining the NSS's position, Mr Evans said: "John Humphrys is right to highlight the discriminatory nature of Thought for the Day in its current format.

"It's inappropriate for Britain's national broadcaster to privilege a religious message or push the idea that only religious people can be trusted to engage in ethical reflection. These comments from a long-standing presenter of the programme should prompt reform."

Watch John Humphrys's comments (from 5:57)

Most recent NSS lobbying

- Last year BBC director-general Tony Hall told the NSS that the BBC was "open to ideas about how to bring to life a wider range of different beliefs". But he said the BBC was not minded to make any changes to Thought for the Day.

John Humphrys's previous comments

- Humphrys made similar comments in 2017, while he was still presenting Today. At that time he said Thought for the Day was "inappropriate" and often "deeply boring".

Discuss on Facebook

- 1
- 2
- 3
- 4
- 5
- 6
- 7
- 8
- 9
- 10
- ...

- See more